

Dennis M. Gormley

Senior Lecturer, University of Pittsburgh

Dennis Gormley is a senior lecturer at the University of Pittsburgh Graduate School of Public and International Affairs. Professor Gormley served for 10 years in the U.S. intelligence community, 20 years as a senior officer and board member of a consulting company focusing on international security, arms control, and weapons proliferation, and 10 years as a senior fellow with US and internationally prominent think tanks. In addition to his GSPIA teaching responsibilities, he serves on various advisory committees in Washington, D.C. dealing with nuclear arms control, the use of armed drones, and the consequences of their proliferation. Professor Gormley was recently asked to serve for three years as one of 21 commissioners—seven each from the US, Germany, and Russia—overseeing the work of the "Deep Cuts Commission," an international nongovernmental body charged with studying the challenges of achieving deep cuts in global nuclear arsenals. Professor Gormley has testified before Congress many times, and consulted for the RAND Corporation, Sandia National Laboratories, the Brookings Institution, and many others. He is a widely published author of books, journal articles, and op-eds on international security issues. His teaching and research areas include: intelligence, military strategy, missile proliferation, missile defense, arms control, and nonproliferation policy.